UK Outlook for Saturday 20 Nov 2021 to Monday 29 Nov 2021:
A cold and potentially cloudy and drizzly start to this period in the north, with some wintery showers following over high ground. Winds will often be blowing between the west and north. High pressure will often affect southern areas, bringing largely settled and dry conditions here, this possibly extending countrywide at times. However, some spells of rain are likely to affect northern areas, accompanied by brisk winds. There is likely a trend towards colder conditions later in the period, with a risk of wintry showers, mainly in the north. Otherwise, temperatures are likely to be close to or just below average. Under high pressure, frost and fog are likely overnight, with any fog slow to clear during the morning.
